

MONDAY EVENING, FEB. 22, 1858.

This day is one of renown. Pausing here a moment and passing our eye, with the swiftness of thought, over the ages that now slumber with the past, we call rapidly to our memory the names of those whose pathways are still marked with their deeds, science and art sparkle with their names, literature glitters from one century to another, the stars of the firmament shine forth as the stars of the first magnitude; but in the glorious galaxy of names that adorn the museum of the past, there is but one name whose actions have gained universal approbation. In the whole range of history, from the earliest period to the present day, we seek in vain for this great

When Freedom's banner in the Indian night
Unfurled 'er standard to the east,
She wore the azure robe of night
And set the stars of glory there,
She mingled with its gorgeous dyes
The milky baldric of the skies,
And strip'd its pure, celestial white
With streakings of the moon's light;
Then from a mansion in the sun
She call'd her eagle bearer down,
And gave into his mighty hand
The symbol of her chosen land.

Warm Bathing.—The warm bath is a good remedy and will cure the most virulent of diseases. A person who may be in fear of having received infection of any kind, as, for instance, having visited a fever patient, should speedily plunge into a warm bath, suffer perspiration to ensue, and then rub dry, dress carefully to guard against cold, and finish off with a cup of strong tea by the fire. If the system is imbued any infectious matter, it will certainly be removed by this process, if it be resorted to before the infection has time to spread over the system. And even if some time has since elapsed, a warm bath will be pretty sure to remove it.

And in receipt daily of many other desirable things.
